

March 8, 1963

Dr. Albert L. Lehninger
Department of Physiological Chemistry
Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine
Baltimore 5, Maryland

Dear Al:

The enclosed invitation from Dr. Pribram stems from a number of discussions we have been having here on the neurochemical bases of memory. I had thought that you might be a particularly apt participant from the standpoint of your current exciting work on the fabrication of model membranes. Judging from the membership which is being accreted for these conferences, they should be of very great interest and I think they may be an excellent opportunity for you to develop contacts with people on various angles of the problem. I hope you will be able to give this your sympathetic consideration.'

I am very sorry that I had to poop out of your last visit here and thus missed a chance to talk to you about these same problems, ourselves.

Sincerely,

Joshua Lederberg
Professor of Genetics

Lehninger